Two in five Aussies plan to change jobs this financial year

RESEARCH from recruitment firm Hays has revealed that 40 per cent of Australians plan to look for a new job in the next 12 months.

According to data from the recruiter's 2019/20 Hays Salary Guide, another 28 per cent of the 1600 professionals surveyed said they may look but were 'unsure' at the time of enquiry.

The reasons?

A lack of promotional opportunities tops the list, cited by 53 per cent, followed by a lack of new challenges (42 per cent) an uncompetitive salary (41 per cent), poor training and development (27 per cent) and poor work-life balance (also 27 per cent).

Moreover, Hays found that only 44 per cent are 'very satisfied' or 'extremely satisfied' in their current job.

Just 47 per cent and 54 per cent are 'very satisfied' or 'extremely satisfied' with their current employer and direct manager respectively.

"A new financial year is fast approaching, which traditionally brings fresh activity to the jobs market as new budgets are set and employers look to add to their headcount," says Nick Deligiannis, managing director of Hays in Australia & New Zealand.

"Financial year end, like New Year, is also a seasonal peak time of the year for people to re-evaluate whether they should stay or change jobs.

"For employers, this movement of people will add to their staff retention challenges, which are already heightened in response to subdued wage growth."

"One-third (33 per cent) of employers have already told us they've seen their staff turnover rate rise in the last 12 months.

"With many people clearly not content in their current position, this figure will likely rise further as people look for a new job to improve their career prospects."

◆ MOVING ON: A large percentage of Australians are planning to look for a new job in the next year.
